

How You Can Help Solve The Nonprofit Funding Crisis

In the face of massive and unprecedented need, nonprofits are experiencing the most severe funding crisis in modern history. The need is almost beyond comprehension as:

- 330 million people have no shelter at all.
- 282 million people had high levels of acute food insecurity during 2023.
- 122.6 million people were displaced by mid-2024.

In response, an increasing number of philanthropists and AI product producers are making larger donations, but each is donating to only to one or a few nonprofits. Very little thought is going toward what cost-effective steps each and every donor can take to help hundreds or thousands of nonprofits increase their skills, financial resources, and impacts.

Consider A New Concept

The concept of using one donation to support a thousand nonprofits might stimulate intellectual curiosity, but does it touch our hearts? Do we envision how this could help the homeless, feed children, or support refugees in crisis? Probably not.

In recognition of this disconnect, I am directing my professional time and energy to supporting far-reaching approaches to change because it makes sense and you can help. Find out how at:

<https://lnkd.in/gvMhFQVr> Over the last twenty-five years, numerous SIOs have been key organizations behind the movement that has driven more than a trillion dollars into social impact investments. Some of these included GIIN, EVPA, AVPN, the AVPA, Confluence

Philanthropy, IIX, and IPE. Several other critically valuable SIIOs include COF, Philea, and Independent Sector.

Conclusion

The accomplishments listed above, and many more, would not have been possible without the champion funders who saw a vision not only for improving the present but for building the future. We owe considerable credit to these funders and the SIIOs they supported.
